SALVINIA ROTUNDIFOLIA IN MASSACHUSETTS.—On August 13 of this year Miss Margery Coffin brought a small aquatic to the Gray Herbarium for identification in connection with her work of disguising water-surfaces for the Camouflage Project. This proves to be the tropical Salvinia rotundifolia Willd. with its characteristic large free-branched trichomes. In his monograph of the genus in Hedwigia, Herzog cites no material north of Mexico, although there are specimens from the southern United States in the Gray Herbarium. Miss Coffin says that the species is well established on a pond in Foxboro, Massachusetts, where it doubtless started from material thrown out of an aquarium.—L. B. SMITH, Gray Herbarium.

THE SPELLING "PENSYLVANICA" AGAIN.—In view of the recent discussions of the correct spelling of the specific name, it is worth recording that Dr. George Neville Jones sends in a clipping from a paper with a photograph of the "Liberty Bell" bearing in an English context the name of the state, PENSYLVANIA, and the comment "If the inscription on the LIBERTY BELL is taken as an authority, then all of us are spelling Pennsylvania wrong!"—EDS.
